SUMMARY: The International Crime Victim Survey (ICVS) was a far-reaching program of standardized sample surveys that investigated householders' experiences with crime, policing, crime prevention, and perceptions of safety. The surveys were carried out in the following countries: Albania, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belarus, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chechnia, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Egypt, England and Wales, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany (West), Hungary, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Macedonia, Malta, Mongolia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Northern Ireland, Norway, Paraguay, the Philippines, Poland, Rumania, Russia, Scotland, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tanzania, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukraine, the United States, Yugoslavia, and Zimbabwe. The data were collected in three waves: 1989, 1992-1994, and 1995-1997. The main focus of the ICVS was whether the respondent was a victim of theft of or from vehicles, other thefts, vandalism, robbery, pickpocketing, sexual harassment or violence, or assault. The surveys also investigated the frequency of victimization, reasons for not reporting a crime to the police, familiarity with the offender in the case of a sexual offense, physical violence, injuries, fear of crime in the respondent's local area, use of help agencies for victims, satisfaction with police behavior, preferred legal sanctions, punishment, and length of detention for offenders, safety precautions when leaving home, possession of a gun, burglar alarm, or insurance, and frequency of going out.

UNIVERSE: Persons aged 16 and over living in Albania, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belarus, Belgium, Bolivia, Botswana, Brazil, Bulgaria, Canada, Chechnia, China, Colombia, Costa Rica, Croatia, Egypt, England and Wales, Estonia, Finland, France, Georgia, Germany (West), Hungary, India, Indonesia, Italy, Japan, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lithuania, Macedonia, Malta, Mongolia, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Northern Ireland, Norway, Paraguay, the Philippines, Poland, Rumania, Russia, Scotland, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, Tanzania, Tunisia, Uganda, Ukraine, the U.S., Yugoslavia, and Zimbabwe.

SAMPLING: Samples of 1,000 to 2,000 were drawn from the population of each country's largest city. In a few countries, the surveys covered several cities by random dialing. In some countries, there was an additional sample of 200 cases from rural areas, or a national sample was taken. Sampling was generally hierarchical. It began with identifying administrative areas within the city, followed by a step-by-step procedure aiming at identifying areas, streets, blocks, households, and, finally, household members aged 16 and over. No substitution of the selected respondent was allowed. There were some exceptions to this procedure. In Finland, a random selection of individuals was drawn from the population register. In Northern Ireland and some rural parts of Spain, telephone penetration was low and interviews were taken face-to-face with some computer assistance.

introduction

The International Crime Victim Survey (ICVS) is the most farreaching programme of standardised sample surveys to look a householders' experience with crime, policing, crime prevention and feelings of unsafety in a large number of countries. This page summarises the development of the ICVS.

There were two main reasons for setting up this project. The first was the inadequacy of offences recorded by the police for comparing crime in different countries. The second was the absence of any alternative standardised measure.

Police figures are problematic for comparative purposes because the vast majority of incidents the police know about are notified by victims, and any differences in propensity to report in different countries will undermine the comparability of the amount of crime counted by the police. Moreover, official police figures vary because of differences in legal definitions, recording practices, and precise rules for classifying and counting incidents. These limitations are well-established. A number of countries have independently mounted crime or 'victimisation' surveys to asses national crime problems- and the ICVS mirrors their approach. Such surveys ask representative samples of the population about selected offences they have experienced over a given time. They are interested in incidents are whether or not reported to the police, and indeed, the reasons why people do and do not choose to notify the police. They thus provide both a more realistic count of how many people are affected by crime and - if the surveys are repeated- a measure of trends in crime, unaffected by changes in victims' reporting behaviour or administrative changes in recording crime.

By collecting social and demographic information on respondents questioned, crime surveys also allow analysis of how risks of crime vary for different groups within the populations, in terms of age, income levels etc. The independent national and local surveys looked promising for comparative studies, and a few attempts were made to use them. However, the number of countries with appropriate surveys was limited, and the surveys used different methods, making comparisons far from straightforward.

It was inevitable, then, that as more was understood about the effect of methodology on how much and what is counted, a case would be made for a fully standardised survey in different countries which would use the same questionnaire, similar methods of sampling selection, consistent survey procedures, and the same method of data analysis.

the ICVS to date

There were three rounds of the ICVS. The first was developed by a working group set up in 1987, leading to fieldwork early 1989. The second ICVS sweep took place in 1992, and the third in 1996/97. Fourteen countries took part in the first sweep, plus Japan and the cities of Warsaw (Poland) and Surabaya (Indonesia). the second sweep covered eleven industrialised countries. Also the project was expanded to thirteen developing countries and six countries in transition, although in most of these, the surveys were restricted to the capital cities. The third sweep involved twelve industrialised countries, all but one of the countries in central and east Europe and fifteen developing countries. At this moment, we are at 92 surveys in 56 countries, a total of 135.465 people have been interviewed. We expect to reach the 100th survey this year.

We are now preparing for the next sweep in the year 2000.

Oversight of the surveys has been managed by the working group, although a co-ordinator in each country has been responsible for the conduct of the fieldwork and, where necessary, for ensuring a sound translation of the questionnaire. The technical management of most of the surveys in the industrialised countries has been carried out by Interview, a Dutch surveying company. Interview subcontracted fieldwork to survey companies in the participating countries, while maintaining responsibility for the questionnaire, sample selection and interview procedures. UNICRI was responsible for the face to face questionnaire and monitoring of the ICVS in the developing countries and countries in transition. The data from the surveys have been integrated and processed by the department of Criminology at Leiden University.

Face to Face methodology

UNICRI was responsible for the face to face questionnaire and monitoring of the ICVS in the developing countries and countries in transition. The face to Face methodology was adopted in all developing countries and the countries in central and East Europe, with the only exception of Solvenia where CATI was used instead. Fieldwork included the undertaking of feasibility/training missions and the carrying out of pilot studies in the countries which were participating for the first time, and of course the fully fledged surveys. The whole procedure was based on the 'manual for the Face to Face surveys of the International Crime victim Surveys' (Alvazzi del Frate, 1995). Deviations of the described procedures were only made in close deliberation with UNICRI.

One of the objectives of the missions was to get acquainted with the country's criminological situation, law enforcement and criminal justice needs in the area of crime prevention. this leads to specific needs as regard to, for example, additional questions to be included in the questionnaire and the development of sampling design. However, due to the comparative nature of the project, the proposed changes were kept within the main structure and content of the standard questionnaire and sampling.

translation of the questionnaire to the local language(s) was the responsibility of the national co-ordinator. Translation was done by people who have expert knowledge of criminology and survey methodology and have expert knowledge in their own languages and in English, French or Spanish -of which solid versions exist since 1989-. This were team efforts and translations back and forth ensure reliable translations. In some of the countries however the interviewers, having to work in several local dialects, were provided with the translation in the language of the majority linguistic group while translations into dialects were provided on the spot, that is to say, during the interviewing process by the interviewers themselves.

fieldwork In most countries the survey was carried out by and ad hoc team of interviewers, the national co-ordinators often relied on senior students. In one country, they were recruited among members of the local community upon recommendation of the community leaders. Sometimes it was important to match interviewers and respondents in terms of ethnicity, religious or tribal affiliation or other such characteristics. some other traits need to be taken into account. For example, in some cultures male respondents were not willing to talk with female interviewers and vice versa, customs preclude the use of male interviewers to interview female respondents particularly for such sensitive issues as sexual victimisation. In some countries, data collection was subcontracted to survey companies.

Samples of 1.000 respondents were generally drawn from the population of the largest city, although in a few countries the surveys covered either several cities. In some of the surveys there was and additional sample of 200 cases form a rural area, or a national sample. Sampling was generally hierarchical, it started with identifying administrative area's within the city, followed by a step-by-step procedure aiming at identifying areas, streets, blocks, households and finally the household member aged over 16 whose birthday is next.

A systematic collection of response rates and refusals was only initiated with the 1997 version of the face to face questionnaire. As regards previous surveys, this information was provided by the national co-ordinators in their final reports. In 1996, the response rates in developing countries was on average 95%, ranging from a minimum of 86% in Botswana to a maximum of 99% in South Africa, The Philippines and Bolivia. Rate of refusal was on average 3.4%. For the countries in Central and East Europe, the average response rate was 81.3 %, lowest were Lithuania (54%) and Slovak Republic(56%), all others were above 73%. It was observed that in some countries the refusal rate was higher due to the vicinity of recent war conflicts which may have increased the general level of suspicion. In these countries the fear of strangers was so widespread that the national co-ordinator suggested including a series of questions dealing with attitudes towards opening the door to strangers and the use of entryphones.

The interviews were done face to face, the questions were read from paper and the answers marked on the questionnaires. Clear routings were indicated to avoid asking questions that were not relevant.

CATI method

The technical management of all (but Finland and Malta) of the surveys in the industrialised countries has been carried out by Interview, a Dutch surveying company. Interview subcontracted fieldwork to survey companies in the participating countries, while maintaining responsibility for the questionnaire, sample selection and interview procedures. The survey on Malta was done according to the Face to Face method, supervised by UNICRI.

sampling: a sample of between 1000 and 2000 households was drawn by random dialing of telephone numbers. Non relevant contacts (like companies) were ignored. Within a household, there was a random selection of a household member aged over 16. In case of a refusal, this household member was not replaced. The process continues until the agreed amount of completed interviews were reached. An exception to this procedure is Finland, a random selection of individual were drawn from the population register. Also an exception was Northern Ireland and some rural parts of Spain, since telephone penetration was low the interviews were taken face to face, but also computer assisted.

response rates: in the eleven industrialised countries in the 1996 sweep taken as a whole, 67% of the respondents selected for interview agreed to take part. this was an improvement on the overall response rate of 60% for the twelve countries of the 1992 sweep and on the 43% response rate in 1989. In 1996, response varied from 40% in the USA to 80% or more in Austria, Finland and Northern Ireland. For the seven countries which took part both in 1992 and 1996, the response rate was about the same or better in five, but fell slightly in two (the Netherlands and USA). For the three countries which had surveys in 1996 and 1989, responses were lower in Switzerland but higher in the other two.

CATI: the interviews were done by telephone. The interviewer reads the questions (and instructions) from a computer screen. The answers are directly entered into the computer system and used to select the next question. (For instance, the items on car crimes were skipped if the household has no cars.)

weighting and datamanagement

weighting

A number weighting variables are computed to compensate for over- and undersampling, deliberate or otherwise, of particular groups within the population. In most of the surveys we had a sample of households, this means that from the individual perspective, members from large households are undersampled and therefore individuals living in small households are oversampled. Both household and individual weights are computed. The individual weights are basically proportional to the household size. In case of a random sample of individuals, the household weight is reversed proportional to the household size. Furthermore the weights compensate for age and gender distribution and, for nationwide surveys, regions within the country.

datamanagement

The surveys in the industrialised countries were organised by Interview B.V. After the surveys were completed they merged the separate datafiles into one well documented datafile. Specific data entry software was developed for the Face to Face surveys. In case countryspecific items were added to the questionnaire, the software was adjusted. These datafiles were merged into one larger file. In turn, the five main files (1989, 1992, 1996 CATI and the 1992, 1996 Face to Face databases) were matched and merged into one master file. Some countries used their own software for entering the data, these files were matched and added separately. At this moment the master file consists of 135.465 cases from 92 different surveys in 56 countries. This file is only available to the partners in the project.

INTERVIEWER:

CHECK EACH OFFENCE ONE BY ONE. IF VICTIM WITHIN 5 YEARS, GO TO QUESTION AS INDICATED IN LAST COLUMN.

eg, If victim of car theft, go to Q 24.

FOR VEHICLE OFFENCES: IF NON-VEHICLE OWNERS TICK FIRST COLUMN

IF VICTIM WITHIN LAST FIVE YEARS OF MORE THAN ONE OFFENCE, WORK THROUGH QUESTIONS IN ORDER

eg, If victim of bicycle theft and a robbery, go to Q28 and work through to Q28d. Then, checking this sheet again, go to Q32 and work through to Q32i.

VICTIMS:

AFTER CHECKING ALL THROUGH THIS SHEET AND COMPLETING DETAILS OF ALL OFFENCES, GO TO INSTRUCTIONS BEFORE Q36.

NON-VICTIMS:

IF NOT VICTIM OF ANY OFFENCE IN LAST 5 YEARS, GO TO TO Q40

INTERVIEWER OBSERVATIONS

City A name could be entered, it would be more advisable to work with a precoded list of cities (to be made by you)
 Size (population) Of the town/village in total.

AREA Level of status according to the standards of your country.

SEX OF INTERVIEWER Note: here we don't ask for the respondents gender.

REGION A useful distinction in regions should be made by you (up to a two digit number is allowed for)

B. C. We advice you to use a special phone-number so 'suspicious' respondents can verify the nature of the survey.

G. It is very important that the actual interview will take place with the selected person. Non-available respondents should not be replaced! (This would seriously effect the outcome of the survey.) A revisit of the household would be necessary in this case.

Q6 Q6a Q6b xxx should be replaced by the median income (after tax) To fill in this figure you should be aware of the income spread in your country table below. The income spread can be divided in four equal parts. Question 6 serves to determine the appropriate quartile for every respondent.

Based on known income distribution in your country, you should set yyy, xxx and zzz to ensure an optimal spread over the four income groups.

It is up to you to determine if these figures should be expressed in terms of day-, week- or monthly income. However, this should be stated in the questionnaire.

yyy - bottom limit	25%
xxx - median	25%
zzz - upper limit	25%
	25%

Q7

Please replace 'religious group..' by the names of appropriate religious groups for your country. No matter the number of religious groups you label, use card 2, column 25, code 1 for specifies.

Q8a

Subjects talked about should be coded afterwards.

OFFENCE CODING SHEET

This important sheet is just used as a necessary help for the interviewer. All information should be filled-in in the main questionnaire as well. This means that the coding sheet should not necessarily be attached to the main questionnaire. Separately (and preferably in another colour) it will be easier to use.

TECHNICAL DETAILS

Unless mentioned otherwise, every question allows for one answer only. Please instruct your interviewers on this point.

specifies

Card 11 has been reserved for all specifies throughout the questionnaire. Every participating country is free to make its own lay-out on this card. Please supply a list of codes and columns.

data delivery

Data can be delivered on both a 3.5" or 5.25" disk MS-Dos (IBM compatible). 11 cards per respondent. Every card should contain respondent number and card number (as specified in the right column of the questionnaire).

Don't knows in value-questions should be coded with a 9 on every available position.

Annex D Overview of 1992 International Crime Survey questionnaire

The 1992 questionnaire was an adaptation of the 1989 version. The translation of the questionnaire into national languages was authorized by each national sponsor before fieldwork execution. The final English version of the questionnaire was the basis for all translations into other languages. Inter/View BV checked the final results, and was responsible for the comparability of all translations.
