DATA COLLECTION DESCRIPTION

Sidney Verba, Norman H. Nie, and Jae-On Kim
POLITICAL PARTICIPATION AND EQUALITY IN SEVEN NATIONS,
1966-1971 (ICPSR 7768)

SUMMARY: This data collection consists of seven parts, six individual country datasets (Austria, India, Japan, the Netherlands, Nigeria, and Yugoslavia), and a comparative crossnational dataset. Personal interviews were conducted from 1966 to 1971 in seven nations, including the United States (the U.S.A. dataset can be found separately in POLITICAL PARTICIPATION IN AMERICA, 1967 [ICPSR STUDY 7015], and is included in Part 7, Crossnational File). A set of core questions was designed to ascertain political participation in both local and national affairs. Questions were constructed to measure respondents' involvement in political organizations at both the local and national levels, participation in formal and informal community groups, the extent of individual contact with public officials, attitudes toward recent political and social changes, and respondents' interest in the political process. Basic demographic data is also included. In addition, each national survey contains some items unique to that particular survey.

STUDY DESCRIPTION

The national cross-sectional study that is described in this document resulted from data collected for the "Cross-National Program in Political and Social Change." This project has been under the primary direction of Sidney Verba, Norman H. Nie, and Jae-On Kim. The "Cross-National Program" was a collaborative program of survey studies in seven nations. The countries involved were the United States, India, Japan, Austria, Nigeria, Yugoslavia, and the Netherlands. Though the project began in 1964, the data collection for the surveys took place at various times between 1966 and 1971. The sample size for the cross-section surveys ranged from 1,775 in Austria to 2,600 in the United States.

Though there were common themes and general guidelines for the development of questionnaires and survey designs for the individual countries, each survey was prepared and administered by experts and research institutes within the given country. In general, each survey can be utilized independently as a representative national cross-section survey. (See the section on SAMPLING for exceptions and qualifications.)

The studies dealt with a wide range of questions but focused most heavily on citizen involvement in political life. A number of publications have utilized these data -- some dealing with one or a few of the nations studies, others more generally comparative.

This codebook describes data utilized in a major comparative study of all seven nations, "Political and Social Stratification: A Cross-National Comparison," by Sidney Verba, Norman H Nie, and Jae-On Kim, to be published in 1978 by Cambridge University Press. This work attempts to deal comprehensively with one aspect of the larger study: the ways citizens participate politically and the processes that lead them to do so.

For a complete bibliography of works utilizing these data and more information on the nature of the "Cross-National Project" and the scholars and organizations that have been involved with it, refer to the appropriate appendices in "Political and Social Stratification."

USE OF THIS DOCUMENT

The data and variables reported in this document form only a subset of the available data. In addition to the other country files there is a SEVEN-NATION COMPARATIVE FILE that contains composite and derived variables. To trace the history of a variable back to the original survey item, it is necessary to use the documentation for the individual country files in conjunction with this COMPARATIVE document.

The documentation for each country includes the variable names that are used in this codebook; the complete text of the items as they appeared on the original surveys; and frequency distributions for each of the items.

The individual country codebooks are available in the same form as this document and are identified as the "Cross-National Program in Political and Social Change" and the appropriate nation. Complete datasets of all of the items on the individual cross-section surveys in either SPSS or BCD format are also available.

The codebook and data for the United States have been previously catalogued by the Inter-University Consortium for Political and Social Research as ICPSR Study Number 7015. A complete discussion of the United States study and substantive findings can be found in "Participation in America: Political Democracy and Social Equality," by Sidney Verba and Norman H. Nie. (New York: Harper and Row, 1972.)

FILE STRUCTURE

This document is available in machine readable form with standard carriage control and upper and lower case print. It has been formatted for 8 1/2 by 11 inch forms.

The data for this file are available in two forms. an Osiris dictionary and data set. Alternatively a set of Alternatively, a file of SPSS control cards and a BCD raw data file can be obtained. Both forms use the same variable names.

Whether or not SPSS is used to analyze these data, it is important to list the SPSS control cards. Included in the control cards is an INPUT FORMAT statement, as well as a VARIABLE LIST and appropriate identifying labels. The format specification identifies the variables and their location on the raw data file.

If appropriate JCL is specified, the SPSS control file contains all of the commands necessary to generate an SPSS system file using SPSS Release 8.0 for IBM/OS systems.

Note:

The codebooks reference deck and column locations (e.g., "8:06-09"). These refer to the specifications on the original questionnaires and do NOT correspond with variable locations for the raw data file. The proper variable list and input format must be obtained from the SPSS control card file.

The raw data file is in card image.

WEIGHTING OF CASES

Since the probability of being included in a sample was not uniform for each group in all countries except Austria and Japan, the sample cases were weighted. The sample weights were assigned in such a way that the sample reproduces the population distribution (on characteristics employed as sampling criteria) and the actual size of the sample obtained.

When the selection probabilities are based on a single criterion and the completion rates do not fluctuate widely from group to group, the weights are made inversely proportional to the initial selection probabilities. Such a weighting was applied to the U.S.A., Austria, the Netherlands, and Yugoslavia. Likewise, when the selection probabilities are uniform and there is no wide variation in completion rates, no weights are applied. as was the case with Japan. However, when varying selection probabilities are combined with somewhat fluctuating completion rates, we applied the weights in such a way that both the selection rates and the completion rates are adjusted, as with India and Nigeria. The weights are reproduced in Table I.

The completion rate of interviews varied from country to country. For instance, in Yugoslavia, the completion rate was almost perfect, while in the U.S.A., owing to the quota-sampling, the completion rate was not particularly meaningful. For other countries, the following completion rates were obtained:

Austria	78%
India	95%
Japan	82%
Netherlands	76%
Nigeria	77%

SAMPLING

The Cross-National Participation Project is a complex and multifaceted research program. As such, there were many different objectives that influenced the overall design. In each nation we generated a national representative sample of a cross-section of the citizenry, a set of mini-community samples for 60-100 communities, a sample of elites for each of these communities, and finally numerous types of information on the demography and structure of each of the communities. A detailed description of each facet of the design would take many pages. The description here will concentrate on the national cross-section samples and the factors that influenced the way in which they were drawn.

In Austria, Japan, the Netherlands, and the U.S., the cross-section samples are representative of the entire nation. In the other three nations, the samples pertain to specified sub-national regions. Due to the enormity of the cultural diversity and sheer physical size, only four states were sampled in India: Andhra Pradesh, Kujarat, Uttar Pradesh, and West Bengal. The cross-section, is however, representative of the citizenry of those four states. For similar reasons, the study was conducted in only four of the six republics of the Yugoslavian Federated Nation. The Republics were Croatia, Macedonia, Serbia, and Slovenia. In Nigeria, the situation is even more complicated. While we had originally planned a study of the entire nation, severe political tensions began to escalate rapidly as we entered the period of our actual field work. The situation degenerated, particularly in the North of the country, where violence had broken out as we were still in the field. This added to our already difficult task of obtaining interviews with women in the Moslem North, lowering the response rate to a point at which we felt unwise to employ the data from Northern Nigeria in our analysis. All the data from Nigeria reported in this work, therefore, excludes that region of the country.

In all countries except the U.S., the cross-section samples are multi-staged area probability samples to the level of the individual. Due to cost considerations and because of our long experience going surveys in this country, the U.S. sample is a multi-staged area probability sample to the block level with block quota techniques employed for the final selection of Respondent's.

The sample design began by stratifying according to region, culture, language, degree of urbanization and development, as well as other relevant characteristics as required in each nation to obtain a sample containing the full national or sub-national variation. Within each strata the Primary Sampling Units were selected with probability proportional to size. In those countries where PSU's represent relatively large areas, a second stage selection of second sampling units was drawn, once again with probability proportional to size.

There was in our design, a continuing tension between two objectives of the study: to produce a highly reliable national cross-section sample that would enable us to describe and compare participatory systems of each of the nations, while at the same time to maintain the ability to focus on local communities as the most relevant and immediate context for understanding political activity.

The first objective calls for a maximum number of sampling points with a minimum amount of clustering, while the second necessitates a more limited number of sampling points, i.e., local communities with a relatively large number of respondents from each community. We resolved the tension between these two objectives by increasing the number of interviews in each country beyond that which would normally be collected for a cross-section national sample. However, we clustered these additional interviews in that subset of our PSU's targeted as our sample of small communities. Thus, we enlarged or augmented the number of respondents interviewed in communities under 50,000 population. Although the sampling details vary from country to country, this general procedure has the following main consequences:

- 1) The additional interviews while adding somewhat to the quality and precision of the samples, do not have as much positive impact as they would have, had they been spread out over all or most of the PSU's.
- 2) The additional interviews in the small communities require weighting interviews in the large urban centers. However, in order not to misrepresent the power and efficiency of our samples, we have divided all weights by a constant so that the number of weighted respondents reported in our analyses is equal almost exactly to the number of respondents interviewed.

In addition, there were the following deviations from pure probability sampling. In India, in the sample for the state of Kujarat, the selection probabilities were increased by 50% in order to obtain an adequate sample of this small, yet politically important urban state. Similar increases in the selection probabilities were also carried out for the Republic of Slovenia and Macedonia within the Yugoslavian sample. These two republics are very small particularly in comparison to Croatia and Serbia and increases by 100% of the selection rates was necessary in order to take account of reasonable internal variation. Finally, in both Nigeria and India rural women were undersampled by substantial proportions.

The experience of both national teams suggested three main reasons for undersampling rural residents in general, all women, and particularly rural women. First, responses of the rural population and of women each tend to be highly homogenous in content. In the rural sectors of these nations, it is extremely difficult to gain access to the women so that interviews may even be conducted. Low literacy rates in rural areas and the absence of any form of "outside the home" social activity for women, tend to create large numbers of "don't know" and "inapplicable" responses for these segments of the population.

As in the case of prior deviation from probabilistic selection weights, these deviations are adjusted in a similar way by sample weights during the analysis phase.

Detailed information on the Austria national sample design follows.

The Austrian data were collected by the Institute f. empirische Socialforschung in Wien, Austria. Field interviews were conducted by IFES in November and December of 1969.

The basic data consist of 1769 interviews with a sample of Austrian citizens over 18 years of age, and under 71 years of age.

THE SAMPLE

The sample is a stratified cluster sample of Austrian citizens. No interviews were conducted in Voralberg province, for reasons of expense. About 3% of the Austrian population resides in that province. Interviews were clustered in 57 communities, ranging from 500 to 2.5 million in population. The citizen sample was drawn from voting lists in the 57 communities. Therefore, these lists include all adult citizens. In a few communities the lists had not been updated since the 1966 national elections; in most communities, provincial elections were held in 1968 or 1969. There is, then, some variability believed to be very minor, in the representativeness of the voting lists. Citizens' names were drawn from the lists of a community in a random fashion.

The communities themselves were selected in the following fashion. Communities under 50,000 in population - with 66% of the population living in these cities, and a weighted total sample of 2500, the plan called for 1,650 interviews in these communities. The sample design generated a plan calling for a sample of 33 citizens in each of the 50 communities. The communities were selected in a population-stratified sample, with groups of 500-2,000 population, 2,001-5,000 population, 5,001-10,000 population, 10,001-20,000 population, and 20,001-50,000 population. As dictated from the population distribution in the most recent census (1961), 24 communities were drawn in the first group, 11 in the second, 5 in the third, and 4 in each fourth and fifth groups. Community names were drawn at random from a list of all Austrian communities in each population group, provided by IFES.

Communities in the range between 50,000 and under 1,000,000 - Eleven percent of the Austrian population lived in cities in this size category. With a total weighted sample of 2,500, we would ideally have drawn 275 citizens from this population group. Due to the necessity for undersampling to keep the total unweighted sample to 2275, we undersampled these cities by one-tenth. A sample of 244 citizens were drawn in proportion to each city's percentage of that part of the population. Six cities fall in that size range.

Vienna - In proportion to its 22.6% of the population, a sample of 565 should have been drawn in Vienna. However, the Vienna sample was underweighted by one-third. A sample of 377 was drawn for Vienna.

RESPONSE RATES

In the 500 to 50,000 population size range -

Sample drawn	1,650
Interviews	1,260
Response rate	76%

In the 50,001 to 999,999 size range -

Sample drawn	244
Interviews	196
Response rate	83%

In Vienna -

Sample drawn	377
Interviews	313
Response rate	78%

Data users should note that in accordance with the sampling plan indicated above, that an appropriate weighted sample be created by upweighting Vienna (undersampled by one-third) and the large cities (undersampled by one-tenth). The 1769 interviews are currently unweighted.
